Teacher Observations	Student Observations
Ms. Wanna began the lesson with using a visual to check in with the student about their current zone of regulation . Ms. Wanna is prepared for the intervention time with all supplies set up and ready prior to bringing the student in. She used a computer and prepopulated powerpoint to work with her student on specific reading skills. She had a pointer and gave the student a pointer. Ms. Wanna works on reading skills, and stops to ask comprehension questions as they read text together. This helps her to understand how much information he is comprehending. When Ms. Wanna observes that the student needed some extra support in particular letter sounds, she stopped and reviewed that letter sound, along with having the student create sentences using those letters. When Ms. Wanna perceives that the student has latched onto a concept, she challenges him in an encouraging way. She uses a lot of authentic encouragement and praise with the student.	The student was asked what goal they work on in here, and he was able to articulate that he works on Reading with Ms. Wanna. This indicates that they have partnered together on the goal and purpose of this intervention. The student sat at a table next to Ms. Wanna at a small table. The student is at ease, relaxed and has a positive rapport with Ms. Wanna. He willingly participates and engages with Ms. Wanna's activities. He sometimes needs some extra thinking time and he seems to feel ok with using this time as needed.

The following elements of teaching and learning were observed during this lesson:

○ Learning driven by inquiry	○ Collaborative learning
○ A LP attribute was explicitly developed	○ Differentiated learning
○ Learning focused on conceptual understanding	○ Students developed as caring global citizens
○ Students given agency to guide their learning	○ Learning explicitly developed an ATL skill

Staff Feedback & Reflections

I truly enjoyed witnessing my students grow more comfortable collaborating with me as I work diligently to foster stronger connections during our intervention sessions. Building rapport is essential, and it has been rewarding to see their progress in this area.

In my efforts to create a more engaging lesson, I aim to encourage my student to enhance his communication skills, particularly because he tends to be quite shy and reserved. My goal is to help him express himself in English with greater confidence, allowing him to participate more actively in discussions.

To support the student in reaching his decoding goals, I incorporated the UFLI, along with flashcards, high-frequency words, and sentence construction exercises. These resources are designed to facilitate his understanding and application of language in a meaningful way.

Looking ahead, I recognize the importance of being better prepared for each lesson. For instance, I encountered difficulty locating my ATL (Approaches to Learning) skill posters that I had intended to share with my students. Ensuring that I have all necessary materials organized and readily accessible will enhance the effectiveness of my teaching and ultimately benefit my students' learning experiences.
