Student Engagement Observations

Student's goal

OJ will independently focus for 1-3 minutes at a time during the whole class, small group, or independent academic time with no more than 1 teacher prompt.

Positive Feedback

- Today Miss Wanna supported a student in a 1-1 setting (Pull out)
- The student seemed a little dysregulated but was redirected by the teacher as they entered the room.
- Miss Wanna had prepared a whiteboard outlining the students' goals and linking all relevant supporting materials. During the mini lesson, she positioned herself close to the student to provide support as needed.
- Instructions were clear and delivered in a multimodal manner (finger pointing, visual, and vocal).
- Clarifying questions was asked promptly and in a timely manner by the teacher.
- A timer used to be part of the activity.
- A calm and neutral tone of voice was used by the teacher as the lesson progressed.
- The student seemed comfortable and engaged in the learning task.
- Miss Wanna used guiding questions to redirect the student's focus.
- Miss Wanna noticed that the student was swinging his feet while working and provided a rubber on the foot of his chair which allowed him to maintain focus.
- Miss Wanna practiced positive reinforcement throughout the lesson and consistently checked for understanding.
- Miss Wanna used leading questions to help the student remember answers to questions he forgot during the reflection time.
- The student was able to clean up and put away materials before leaving the learning environment.

Feedback & Reflection

Feedback & Reflection

I believe I effectively ensured that the intervention aligned with the student's learning goal. Before beginning the task, I reminded the student of his goal to help set clear expectations and support task engagement.

I selected the "I Spy with My Little Eye" activity because it directly supports the student's goal of sustaining focus for 1–3 minutes with no more than one prompt. The activity requires the student to identify and match objects, encouraging attention, visual scanning, and sustained engagement while remaining accessible and motivating.

Moving forward, I plan to ask the student to retell the instructions before starting the task, particularly as the student does not seek support when needed. This strategy will support the development of the student's thinking and communication skills and will also allow me, as the teacher, to check for understanding and adjust support as necessary.

Takeaways/Action Steps/Follow-Up:

- Providing the student with opportunities to engage independently before introducing prompts, thereby supporting the development of autonomous thinking and self-agency.
- Modelling effective writing strategies by integrating structured writing activities to support the student's attention and engagement during writing tasks.
